Washington replied with a scathing letter, telling him he should have an opportunity as soon as feasible of proving to the world that he was not guilty of a breach of orders and of misbehavior before the enemy. in not attacking them, and of making an unnecessary, disorderly, and shameful retreat. Lee wrote a grossly insolent reply to this, welcoming the opportunity of showing to America the sufficiency of her respective servants, and sneering at the temporary power of office and the tinsel dignity attending it. He was at once put under arrest, and a courtmartial convened July 4, with Stirling as president, to try Lee on the two charges stated by commander-in-chief or betrayal of her to the latter-- or both. Even to gain a chance for the one, by displacing...
