PREFATORY NOTE An attempt is made in this paper to set forth the attitude of the several states as regards the encouragement of secondary education through the granting of special subsidies to the middle schools. As this inquiry covers the period from the establishment of the earliest secondary schools in this country down to the present time, it is made to deal more particularly with systems of state aid rather than with a consideration of aid granted to individual institutions. No account has been taken of the aid granted to state normal schools, which are, in theory, professional schools, but very often are, in reality, schools devoting a large part of their time to secondary instruction. Preparatory departments such as state universities maintained during the earlier years of their existence, are likewise omitted from this consideration. For a definition of the term secondary education, the reader is referred to two discussions which appeared in print at about the same time. The first of these is found in the introductory chapter of The Making of Our Middle Schools, by Professor Elmer Ellsworth Brown of the University of California; the other, by President Arthur T. Hadley of Yale University, is an article entitled The Meaning and Purpose of Secondary Education, published in the School Review for December, 1902. Berkeley, California, May, 1903. STATE AID TO SECONDARY SCHOOLS CHAPTER I THE COLONIAL PERIOD It has been said that the early schools of New England are studied best in...
