Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: .The work of the upper grades and of the High School is unquestionably vocational for the great majority of pupils who stay in school. In fact, historically, the High School is a vocational school. It had its origin in the need of the professions for men fitted by education to take up professional study, as law, or medicine, or the ministry. Now we have other professions, the profession of commerce in its multifarious forms, with its High School of Commerce from which to draw recruits; the engineering professions, with the Polytechnic High School to give the initial preparation. The list might be extended. But what of those pupils who drop out of school before they have even an appreciation of those opportunities? For many of those who go through the high school the preparatory class is a welcome modification of the grammar grade plan. If a practical way can be devised to accomplish it, why not have similar avenues opened up for those pupils whose academic inclinations are not strong, but who might and probably would be attracted by preparatory vocational training leading evidently toward business on the one hand and industry on the other, letting those who so desire travel by the present route, but letting those who heretofore have had no opportunity for further work that really appealed to them find such opportunity, not the exclusive privilege of the fourteen hundred in each year s enrollment whose circumstances and tastes attract them to the...
